: 1 .	the children were never fed more than 1500 calories of food per day, although they were supposed to be getting a minimum of 2,500 calories. the children were never given any fruit, vegetables, or meat. The daily diet, which did not vary except that after 1943 a little milk and sugar was added to the tea and a slice of butter for each serving of bread, consisted of the following:	50X1
	6) Breakfast (8:00 a m): a cup of weak tea and 50 grams of bread 6) Lunch (noon): a bowl of soup (almost clear water with a few grains of rice) and one tablespoon of rice gruel 6) Tea (4:00 p m): a cup of weak tea and 50 grams of bread 6) Dinner (8:00 p m): a bowl of soup (same as lunch) and 50 grams of bread
5.	The lack of toilet and laundry soap coupled with the near starvation diet caused the children to be completely covered with lice at all times.
60X1	The children were literally eaten by lice, bedbugs, fleas, etc. To add to these unbearable living conditions, the OHMATDE and DETDOM orphanages were not heated at all during the winter months which are extremely cold in that area. Because the children lacked warm clothing, they were kept in bed for weeks at a time during the most severe cold spells. They just lay in bed motionless, their thin bodies blue from the extreme cold.
1 6.	the mortality rate at all of the OHMATDE in the Kazakh SSR was staggering. At the OHMATDE in Kizil Orda approximately 400 children at all times during this period, yet the monthly mortality rate was well over 50%. The deaths resulted from the aforementioned living conditions which developed into diarrhea, pneumonia, furunkulez (furunculosis) and avitominoza (vitamin deficiency). There were no official statistics or records kept on the number of deaths.	50X1

7.	The few children who lived through the four years of "care" in OHMATDE orphanages were both physically and mentally retarded due to their many illnesses and severe malnutrition. For instance, at four years of age the children were only starting to utter incomprehensible sounds, a good half of them could not walk, they had no control over their elimination processes (which only added to the filth and disease and many were obviously feeble-minded. All of the children also suffered from konuktivit, which is an eye infection brought on by a combination of malnutrition and uncleanliness. When the children awoke they could not open their eyes because of pust that had glued them shut during the course of the night. Their eyes had to be washed open first thing in the morning and bathed throughout the day. This condition also caused the children to rest their eyes by closing them for long periods of time throughout the day.),

8.	getting so many war orphans, the average number at Kizil Orda decreased from 400 to 150), and started receiving some "luxuries" from the US. OHMATDE orphanage in Kizil Orda occasionally received new bedding, clothing, medicine, soap, white bread, butter, chocolate and sugar.	50X1 50X1 50X1
	the lice and other vermin were still present, but in lesser numbers, and the deaths were somewhat less frequent.
9 .	The conditions within these OHMATDE and DETDON children's homes need not have been so bad if the Soviet administrators and workers within them had not stolen, for their own financial gain, the major portion of the food, medicine and equipment allotted to the children. of OHMATDE and the educational administrators of DETDOM children's homes diverted the biggest quantity of food and goods that were earmarked for the children, and lesser quantities were taken by officials and workers down the line. On the level of the individual orphanage, the ZAVHOZ (Zaveduigshiy Hoziaystvo - economic manager of the household), Det Sistra (children's sister - literal translation) and cooks	:

	of children who were adopted by local residents or lived to be transferred to the local DETDOM, this was in effect the end of their search. It was a difficult task indeed to persuade a parent who, in most cases, was a Soviet soldier who just returned from the front, and who had in some cases traveled by foot from the western regions of the USSR thinking that he would be reunited with his child, that he need not search any further. They would describe their infants, as they saw them last,
